

from schools and colleges to spend the holidays and the vacation will be about two weeks. There are also many relatives and friends visiting in the city, and there will be more or less entertaining for them. The season is unusually quiet, however. The youngest sets will be the guests of honor at whatever entertainments are given. There is a joyousness about those who are fresh from school and the experiences of the year, or part of the year, are enough cisco, will be at home informally Tuesday to keep the families and all of the friends interested as long as the holiday lasts. One of the pet features of this season will be the small and informal gatherings which the young girls will have, to talk over all that has happened. The number of stories which will be told will be feasts for them to remember till they meet again, next summer, or, perhaps, in the spring. The frolics and the other delightful times will be gone over again and the good times they have had will be the envy of all who are not so fortunate as to have the privilege of a | Chicago bar. Mr. and Mrs. Shortle left last year or more in a school away from home. A good part of a party is talking it over, and so a good part of life at school is telling about it at home. The holidays are always times for more or less gayety and
